These studies show that the belief-rule-based expert system is flexible and valid for inventory control. The case study also shows that the BRB-IC method can compensate DFE by training BRB using historical demand data for generating reliable ordering policy.

A Belief Rule Based Expert System to Assess Tuberculosis

Belief rule based expert systems are an extension of traditional rule based systems and are capable of handling different types of information with uncertainties. 3.1 Representation of domain knowledge A belief rule is the extension of traditional IF-THEN rule, where a belief structure is used in the consequent part.

found that the Belief Rule Based Expert (BRBES), presented in this paper, is more reliable and accurate. Keywords: Measles, Expert System, Belief Rule Base, Uncertainty, Evidential Reasoning 1 Introduction Measles is a highly contagious infection caused by measles virus. It is a common disease in developing countries like Bangladesh.

A Belief Rule Based Expert System to Diagnose Measles

The Belief Rule-based Inference Methodology using the Evidential Reasoning approach (RIMER) [15] consists of Belief Rule Base to represent uncertain knowledge and Evidential Reasoning (ER) to act as an inference engine. A belief rule has antecedent part and consequent part.

and belief rule-based (BRB) systems. BRB has been previously tested for consumer preference prediction and target setting in case studies from the beverages industry.

accurate and robust decision can be made. The belief rule-based inference methodology-RIMER [15] has addressed such issue by proposing a belief structure which assigns degree of belief in the various referential values of the attributes. In section 2 will briefly represent belief rule base inference methodology-RIMER.

The belief rule-based classification system (BRBCS) is developed in Section 3, and then four experiments are performed to evaluate the accuracy, robustness, interpretability and time complexity of the proposed BRBCS in Section 4.
