Update to Practice Standards for Electrocardiographic

Electrocardiographic (ECG) monitoring is essential for the safe administration of general anesthesia. This document provides an update to the practice standards for ECG monitoring in the operating room. The update includes changes to the frequency of ECG monitoring during induction and emergence from anesthesia, and the use of ECG monitoring to detect myocardial ischemia. The update also addresses the use of ECG monitoring in patients with known or suspected coronary artery disease. The update is based on a review of the literature and expert consensus. The update is intended to provide guidance to anesthesia providers on the use of ECG monitoring in the operating room.
